

Omega and Alpha An Obituary

Mr. Zackary Zymurgy died in Zanzibar, Tanzania today.

Born Aaron Aardvark in the Alaskan Aleutian Island village of Andreanof, his parents, assigned to Abyssinia as ambassadors to this antiquated autocracy, anchored Aaron's childhood with artistic activities. His autobiography indicates that his favorite song was "Abdul Abulbul Amir." He attended the American Academy of Art in Armenia followed by jobs as an accountant, an auctioneer for the American Automobile Association, Aerospace Avionics augmenter and an AAMCO mechanic. A fine athlete, he was the AAU actuary champion of Alexander City, Alabama following an amicable administrative augmentation as an antitrust attorney in Aargau, Switzerland. An amorous adventure with autonomous adulteresses in Atlanta caused Mr. Aardvark to become addicted to alcohol and acquired an anatomical anomaly, aggravated by allometric adrenal activity. Joining AA he ardently aspired to alter his name because of an amoral animosity to altruism, amply attributed to autistic actions.

And so, Zachary Zymurgy, zoologist, Zionist zealot and a xenophobic disciple of Zoroaster, emerged in Zuider Zee, Zambezi and Zabrze, Poland seemingly at once. An accomplished zeppelin zoning consultant, he climbed Zugspitze Mountain. Moving to India he became a zaminder, training zebras in his spare time and fishing for zander on the banks of the Zuider Zee on vacations. He was a zestful member of the zeitgeist of the time, discovering how to make zippers from zinkenite. Zooming forward in time, Zymurgy became a Zwingalian, eating only zwieback, played the zither and studied the zodiac in a Zolaesque manner.

As a zookeeper in Zermatt, his zoonotic zest caused him to conrtact zebraitis and he died of Zollinger-Ellison Syndrome.